Dear Enrico, Oct. 23rd 1945

Miriam Brodsky who works at the Princeton Univ. Press has had about ten years of editorial experience, says that no letter may be used without permission of the writer & no quotation can be used without permission of publisher especially poetry. After a poet is paid then his publisher for the use of his poetry by an author. A remark if published is also taboo unless one has permission to use it in a book. As to Mr. Ernesto's letter that if written in an official capacity belongs to the Board. You would have my permission to use it if written unofficially.

Nizam agrees with me that Polytechnic Hills isn't a provocative nor descriptive title, according to her idea. Titles she says, are usually dully descriptive or if, forcing one to investigate, are challenging to one's imagination.

Have company or I'd write more.

I get this off
instanter; air mail.

Love. ABM
